CRIME UNDER CORONAVIRUS

Rebecca
Davidson
Rural Affairs
Specialist

The COVID-19 lockdown resulted in an initial reduction in thefts overall. But keen to cash in on the crisis, criminals continued to target the countryside and there were spikes in crimes such as livestock rustling.

With farmers' minds focused on finding new ways to work safely while keeping the nation fed, the cost of livestock theft rose by nearly 15% year on year in April 2020 as rustlers took advantage of the high demand for food.

Farmers also had to deal with an influx of walkers on their land, and reports of dog attacks on farm animals also rose.

Incidents of fly-tipping waste increased in rural areas while local authority recycling centres were closed.

These crimes, compounded by the extra pressure of COVID-19, can seriously affect the wellbeing of farmers who work long hours and often in isolation.

Rural crime is like a wave as organised criminality spreads through our villages, farms and fells, affecting everyone in the countryside. Now, as the economic impact of the pandemic begins to bite, we are concerned that criminal activity could escalate – making it more important than ever that we work together to stem the tide.

Hidden Others, Hidden Communities (Philo 1992 – still!)

- Current work on migrant workers (Yarwood)
- Hidden Others
- Unseen and not included in 'rural communities'
- More likely to be victims of global rural crime
- More likely to be viewed as criminal or illegal

Research Agenda

- From local to global
  - Recognise global crime (often hidden)
- From bounded community to global village
  - Recognise others and other experiences of crime
- Continue exploring relationship between rurality, criminality and cultural threat
- International research co-operation
  - I welcome opportunities for collaboration!
